

DIET AND IMMUNITY: ENHANCING HEALTH IN FARMED FISH THROUGH NUTRITION

Albert Caballero-Solares^{1,4*}, Khalil Eslamloo^{1,5}, Xi Xue¹, Mohamed Emam¹, Tomer Katan^{1,6}, Umasuthan Navaneethaiyer^{1,7}, Kira Randall¹, Wenlong Cai^{2,8}, Chris C. Parrish¹, Rachel Balder³, Mark D. Fast², Matthew L. Rise¹

¹Memorial University of Newfoundland, St. John's, NL, Canada. ²Atlantic Veterinary College, University of Prince Edward Island, Charlottetown, PE, Canada. ³Cargill Animal Nutrition and Health, Elk River, MN, USA. Current affiliation: ⁴University of Stirling, Stirling, Scotland, UK. ⁵Centre for Marine Applied Research, Dartmouth, NS, Canada. ⁶Stantec Inc., St. John's, NL, Canada. ⁷AquaBounty Canada, Inc., Fortune/Souris, PE, Canada. ⁸City University of Hong Kong, Kowloon Tong, Hong Kong, China.

*Presenter (email: albert.caballerosolares@stir.ac.uk)

Highlights from a 9-year university-industry collaborative research on dietary manipulations of the immune responses of Atlantic salmon Salmo salar

Findings reveal the potential to tailor feed formulations that exert specific modulatory effects on fish immune responses.

Ongoing and future research

Next generation ingredients (e.g., microbial oils)

Functional feeds for cleaner fish

Feed solutions for gill disease

Climate-resilience promoting feeds

This research was funded by

Participating research teams from

